CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE:

Fiona Siegenthaler is a Senior Lecturer at the Institute of Social Anthropology, University of Basel, Switzerland, and a Research Associate at the Research Centre Visual Identities in Art and Design (VIAD), University of Johannesburg. With an MA in art history (2005) and a PhD in social anthropology (2012), her interests lie in the intersection of social sciences and the humanities, and contemporary visual and performative arts in particular. She has work experience in academia as well as in art galleries, art education, art criticism, and curatorial practice.

Egas Moniz Bandeira is a PhD candidate at the Cluster of Excellence “Asia and Europe in a Global Context” at Heidelberg University, as well as at the School of Law of Tohoku University in Sendai (Japan). He studied

Law and East Asian Studies at Heidelberg University and is licensed to practice law in Germany. His research interests include the legal, political, and intellectual history of late Imperial China, Sino-Japanese and Sino-Russian relations, and theories of the state.

Takahiro Yamamoto received his PhD in international history from the London School of Economics in 2016. Having held postdoctoral fellowships in Shanghai and Tokyo, he is currently an assistant professor of cultural economic history at the Cluster of Excellence “Asia and Europe in a Global Context” at Heidelberg University.

Steven Ivings studied Economic History at the London School of Economics & Political Science (LSE – University of London) and Japanese Studies at the School of Oriental and African Studies (SOAS – University of London). His PhD thesis examined colonial settlement and migratory labor in Karafuto (Southern Sakhalin) from 1905 to 1945. His current research interests include the Japanese empire in comparative perspective, colonial migration, migratory labor markets in northern Japan, Hokkaido in the context of Japanese and global history, whaling, and the sports and leisure industries in East Asia.
